

Want to meet other parents in your student's grade and find out what really goes on at school? Greene's Parent Network brings together parents in each grade level to share successes and challenges and parenting ideas related to the social, emotional, and physical development of our children — everything from discussing homework strategies to setting boundaries about music, movies or dating.

Every month, we host events for parents by grade level to share ideas face-to-face and meet with relevant guest speakers. The monthly meetings are a unique forum to encourage communications between parents about important topics related to students in their particular grade. Examples of guest speakers include the Principal, Greene and Paly school counselors, and experts in particular areas of concern. Follow up notes are typically provided for parents that are unable to attend.

Parent networks are not political, advocacy, or formal parent education groups; they are not channels for airing individual grievances about school policy or personnel. We do not take positions on issues as an organization or seek consensus on appropriate parenting styles, nor are gatherings appropriate for discussion of school-specific issues such as child-teacher or parent-teacher conflicts.
